Dear Hiring Manager, or to whom it may concern,

Please hire me. I work. A lot. Some say too much, but I think they are the ones who peripherally don't like working... I mean, you can't call yourself a hard worker and refuse to work on Sundays if your boss asks you to work on Saturdays. If they ask of you much, make sure you give them too much — that's my life philosophy.

I'm also very attentive to details: I once set an out-of-office reply saying I would not be checking emails while on holiday. Then I spent most of the holiday checking whether it was working properly. I like to ensure everything runs like clockwork — except for my sleep cycle, which is a long-lost battle, but nothing two cups of coffee in the morning can't fix.

I thrive under pressure, survive on caffeine, and only need to rest occasionally. If you need someone who will work weekends, holidays, and possibly in their dreams — I am your person.

I promise to bring unstoppable energy, a questionable work-life balance, and a genuine passion for making your company even greater and wealthier. Please, let me prove that exhaustion is just another word for "commitment."

Eagerly,
John B. Goode Workmann.
